The Broad Residency in Urban Education

Lynn Liao is managing director of The Broad Residency in Urban Education, a two-year management development program that places emerging, talented private sector leaders into full-time managerial positions in urban school districts throughout the country to make them more efficient and effective. Liao is responsible for all aspects of the program including attracting, selecting, training, placing and supporting Broad Residents as they work to significantly improve district central office systems and processes. Under her leadership, The Broad Residency has become highly selective and highly competitive. More than 150 residents have been placed in school districts and other education organizations nationwide. Prior to joining The Broad Residency, Liao served as a director at The Broad Foundation, responsible for managing the foundation's portfolio of district and national principal leadership program investments and as the foundation's liaison with numerous large urban districts including New York City, San Diego, and Philadelphia. Before joining The Broad Foundation, Liao worked with community-based organizations and education technology companies to improve learning experiences for students and teachers. Liao also served as an AmeriCorps member and then later as a board member for Partners in School Innovation. She began as a consultant for McKinsey and Company. Liao holds both an M.B.A. and a master's in education from Stanford University.
